The adoption of the minute is usually an essential component of corporate meetings, offering companies an accurate record of important events such as shareholder votes, workers’ disputes and discussion of future strategies. Examine the agenda of the previous meeting. There may be raised points that need to follow in the current meeting. Know these themes before the meeting will allow you to quickly take information and make shortest notes. Increase the meeting with a recording device if you think you can fight to keep up with discussions. Tazing the meeting means that it is possible to transcribe more significant points with less time constraints. Sit down the person presided in the meeting. This will allow you to ask for clarifications on any raised point that you find ambiguous or not capped. Write the time and date to your notebook’s head. Take note of the person who presides the meeting, the minute button (yourself) and the seat. Lists all participants other than the president and alone. Go around a sheet of paper and request each participant to fill their name. This information can then be transcribed to your full verbal later. Keep track of the meeting agenda. Meetings usually have numbered points for discussion. Conversations can often go out with bribes, however, which means that objects are missed or are discussed off sequence. Follow the numbers of the agenda and notice as they are discussed, even if off sequence. Document any movements made regarding the decisions on the rules or the future management of the company. Lists individuals who propose movements and, if a vote occurs, records who and how many have been voted in favor of movement. Document how the motion was carried out, also that it is by verbal confirmation, hands show or secret vote. Write the minutes as soon as you can after the meeting. It is likely that the information is fresh in your mind, so you can recall more details that if you left it for a later moment. Record your name at the end of the document so that colleagues can contact you with queries on the content.

Some influencers also encourage their followers to “hodl” various rat tokens as part of their long-term strategy. The origin of Hodl! The word “hold” has been used in finance for a long time as part of the buy-and-hold strategy. This method of investment involves the purchase of a financial asset and the estate for an indefinite period of time. This is related to the fact that an investor should not be influenced by short-term market movements and look at long-term vision. The term “HODL” comes from a post made in 2013 on cryptocurrency forum Bitcointalk shortly after a move from the Chinese government caused the price of Bitcoin to fall drastically within a day. An intoxicated member typed a post entitled “I AM HODLING” in response, detailing his general fortune with the investment and his desire to continue holding his assets in the future. Shortly after that incident, the term “hodling” became common in the community of cryptocurrency enthusiast. He made his way into memes and social media and became a way to signal the desire of a proprietary token to hang on their assets. “Hodl” and Cryptocurrencies
The biggest reason why “hodl” has become such a popular term is the general volatility of cryptocurrency prices. Many cryptocurrency tokens, even relatively stable as Bitcoin and Ethereum, often have very volatile market fluctuations. The cost of these tokens can fall 100% one month and then rise 300% in the next months. The prices of cryptocurrency are also prone to whale movements (a term for people or organizations holding a very large amount of a particular token). If even a whale decides to sell a particular token, they could reservoir the price entirely. “HODL” is considered as a way to fight these fluctuations in price. An asset-holder following the strategy does not sell, even when the market changes. Many people who “HODL” do not even pay close attention to the daily market movement of criptologists, preferring instead to take a long-term view of their tokens. Why people “Hodl?”

One of the biggest reasons why people see “hodl” as a practicable strategy is their belief in underlying technology and the case of use behind it. Bitcoin and most other cryptocurrencies are based on a technology called blockchain, which has many uses, including a way to make payments securely and anonymously on the internet. Some people believe that Bitcoin is the future of all financial transactions rather than fiat currencies like dollars and euros. For many cryptocurrency owners, “hodling” is an intriguing perspective. The value of a single bitcoin has passed from less than a dollar when it came out forturn more than a decade ago to five digits in recent years. Despite the high volatility of the market, many cryptocurrency owners believe in long-term financial perspectives of bitcoin and other tokens. the samemany other people believe that buying cryptocurrency is equivalent to gambling. Many people also believe that the values of cryptocurrencies are better when people buy and don’t sell their tokens. That’s why ðehodlĀ is such a well-used term in the community Ā is often said to beginners who might be afraid to hold such a volatile asset. ðHODLĀ fights what cryptographic users call ðĀFUDĀ, which stands for ðĀfear, uncertainty. FUD can include anything from naysayers to governments to negative pressures on the cryptocurrency problem. Using “HODL” is generally used only to refer to cryptocurrencies and not other assets. If you want to use the term ðehodl,Ā reserve it for conversations about these tokens or it could be misinterpreted. If you run into people who tell you about ðehodl,Ā there is a good chance that you’ve met cryptocurrency enthusiasts. Doesn’t sound like a word you can think of, so what does it mean in GPOY stands for: Free image of yourself
The acronym is almost always followed by a photo or an animated GIF which is a selfie or image of someone or something different that resembles a situation, action, or character similar to the user who shares it. The acronym is primarily used to describe visual content on the popular microblogging platform Tumblr and is considered part of its community culture. It is not used much on other popular social networks like Facebook and Twitter, although you may encounter it in those places. When it comes to Tumblr culture, GPOY is rarely used in full sentences and is mostly used alone without any other words or information. The photo or GIF communicates the message. When a photo or GIF is so relatable that it could be used to symbolize you or your life in any way, then it is appropriate to include GPOY in the caption. Think of this as the equivalent acronym of saying, “This is how I feel / what I look like now.” Example #1 A picture of a sad looking dog or cat with the caption GPOY. This lets people know you share the feeling in the photo. Example #2 As an alternative, you could take a picture of yourself that looks sad and then tag it with GPOY. According to Know Your Meme, the acronym GPOY can be traced back to 2008, when Tumblr users would tag posts with “GPOYW” on Wednesday. The posting of a free photo on Wednesday was a weekly ritual for several Tumblr users. By 2009, the W it was quietly out, so users could post on any day of the week. With the explosive growth of Tumblr, the popularity of the GPOY memes spread rapidly within the community of Tumblr, where it isoften used by the younger crowd. Tumblr fans use it to describe other memes, photos, webcycles, gifs, drawings or anything else visual. Despite its popularity, the acronym is one of those rare that remain popular within a community of social media and rarely see elsewhere online. You can do your best to interpret the acronym KMSL alone, but it is so obscured that you would probably have had trouble. KMSL is about to kill me by laughing confused? You have the right to be! This acronym tricks you into thinking that there are four words in it when there are only three. Whoever coined the acronym must have believed that “me” was two separate words (me) because it is what the abbreviation seems to imply. KMSL is a variation of lol. It is an acronym parody that is used when a person wants to convey and exaggerate their amused reaction during a text-based conversation. In these days, the less common variations of LOL, such as KMSL, can be more effective in expressing fun in a world where lol was so abused that its meaning is lost a lot. Although no one ever literally kills himself with laughter, they can use KMSL to show how much it looks like something fun for them. Whoever is in the receiving end of the KMSL reaction will probably have the suggestion that the person reacting is extremely fun and so commander in a very entertained way from their screen.
1 Friend 1: Dressed too fast this morning and he didn’t even realize there was a pair of underwear attached to my pants until I got to class... Dude # 2: KMSL !!! In this example, friend #2 uses KMSL as a standalone reaction for the Friend Message #1. In many cases, it is not necessary but the use of the acronym all alone. #1: Have you watched the Big Bang theory last night episode? Dude 2: Yes, I was KMSL all the time ... such a fun show!! In the second example above, friend #2 uses KMSL in a sentence to describe a reaction they had in the past. You can also use it in current and future times (such as “I’m KMSL” and “I will be KMSL”). The exact interpretation for KMSL (killing myself laughing) sometimes used interchangeably with the acronym KML because KMLĀ makes the extra letter with the extra letter not necessary for the Word. KML has another interpretation, which could be a reason to attack with KMSL. Some people interpret KML as they kill my life, which has a definition similar to FML (f [Bleep my life]. KMSL is one of those acronyms that is part of a larger group of creative and exaggerated variations of LOL. Here are three others you can exchange with KMSL. PMSL. I’m laughing. PMSL is very similar to KMSL, but perhaps just a little more inappropriate. At least it does not include a F. Rofl bomb:on the floor laughing. More popular than KMSL and PMSL, ROFL is a good one to go with if you want to attack with more recognizable acronyms. Lmao: laughing at my A  off. A well knownlol, perhaps even more than rofl. Rofl.
