Sunday September 25, 2022 6:50 am PDT by Sami Fathi Apple may decide to release its remaining products for 2022, which include updated iPad Pro, Mac mini, and 14-inch and 16-inch MacBook Pro models, through press releases on its website rather than a digital event, according to Bloomberg's Mark Gurman. In his latest Power On newsletter, Gurman said that Apple is currently "likely to release its remaining 2022 products via press releases.... How to make it work: Connect all the bot's servos following the fritzing circuit diagram in attached picture. (sometimes could happen servos jittering, so to avoid this, it is important to connect one ground pin of arduino to the ground of servos supply) Connect arduino to the PC and transfer the arduino code to the board. If everything works correctly you can see the red led of the Bluetooth module flashing. This mean that is ready but disconnected. I supplied the servos using a dedicated board attached on the breadboard, this is a comfortable way but is not necessary, it is only important to supply them separately from the Arduino board. Servos have a supply range from 4.8 to 6 V. Install the ready made apk on the smartphone, launch it, and after the splashscreen you will be asked for permission to turn on the Bluetooth of the phone (if OFF), press yes. (if already ON no request). Now you are in the main screen of the APP Press the Bluetooth logo and choose the HC-06 You return in the previous screen while the flashing red led on the bluetooth module turns to steady. The text below the bluetooth button is now green and become CONNECTED. Now (if everything works) you are able to move the bot wireless using the slides (and impress friends :) It is a very simply app and for sure can be improved a lot, but it is a good starting point to explore other possibility. Happy making! Friday August 13, 2021 10:08 am PDT by Joe Rossignol Apple Arcade recently surpassed 200 games available on the service, and several new titles are coming soon, including Tetris Beat, Baldo, Asphalt 8: Airborne, Layton's Mystery Journey, Zen Pinball Party, Zookeeper World, MasterChef: Let's Cook, and more. Another game can be added to the list, as Castlemania: Grimoire of Souls from well-known Japanese company Konami is set to launch... March 8, 2007, 7:50 PM UTC By all DAY (From David Naggjar, TODAY Production Manager) My wife has always told me that I should keep a log of various anecdotal things that happen to me while working at NBC. I can hear her saying, "What will it take you, 2 or 3 minutes to write a few lines in a journal, on a pad or even a piece of paper while you're sitting on the plane?" So, I am glad we've started this blog for the Today Show, and I look forward to sharing my experiences with everyone from time to time. I have been with the Today Show for a long time and have been fortunate enough to do a lot of traveling for them over the years. As a production manager, I spend a good amount of time with crews and producers on remotes. From a country road outside Lincoln, Nebraska interviewing a 92 year-old postman still delivering his mail on a freezing cold January morning, to the feet of the Sphinx and the Pyramids of Egypt for the 1st "Where in the World is Matt Lauer." There are many stories that happen to us on the road, and it's always a lot of fun to reminisce about these anecdotal moments with friends-especially with crews and producers who happened to be part of these stories. Of course the stories get embellished as they are told and we all try to correct each other with each person's point of view "That's not what really happened!!!" This week was full of events where our crews, producers and production managers were out on the road - from the stormy weather in the Midwest, to the snow and cold in the Northeast and the Anna Nicole story in Florida and the Bahamas. On an average morning this week I found myself driving in the snow and unplowed streets and highways at 4AM in the morning to come to Studio 1A in Rockefeller Center in New York City. As we prepared for the 7AM start to the broadcast, I made contact with the other Production Managers who were on the road covering some of the week's events. One was in the Bahamas with our correspondent Ron Mott reporting on the Anna Nicole Smith story. One was in Enterprise, Alabama with Al Roker reporting on the devastation there. From Egypt to Nebraska over the last 20 plus years, to Bahamas and Alabama in one day, we cover it all. Tomorrow, next week... who knows? Maybe I'll be in warm place! Summer travelers, take note: If you're looking for the perfect vacation camera, you have lots of choices to make. Prices are dropping, image quality is improving, and ease of use is better than ever. When my friend Gene asked me to help him drive an '84 VW Cabriolet from Florida to California, I jumped at the chance. I had just received three interesting new cameras to test including Fujifilm's new S602, Leica's much-anticipated Digilux 1, and Sony's brand-new CD400 CD Mavica. I used the 10-day road trip as an opportunity to test these cameras the same way most vacationers would use them - jumping out of the car for quick snapshots along the way. Since trunk space was at a premium, I opted to leave my tripod at home - also just like most vacationers. Traveling with a digital camera poses a problem for many users. Unless you drag a laptop along for the ride, you'll need to store all of your pictures on the camera's storage medium until you get home. The CD-R-based Sony Mavica can store more than 100 pictures on a 3" CD-R or CD-RW disc; extra disks are small, inexpensive, and easy to find. The Fujifilm S602's dual memory slots let me keep a 1 GB IBM Microdrive in the Compact Flash slot and a 128 MB memory card in the SmartMedia slot. Between the two cards, the Fuji can hold nearly 1,000 pictures, more than enough for even the longest vacation. The Leica uses SD memory cards, which are only available in sizes up to 128 MB. Leica provides a single 64 MB card with the camera, which only holds about 35 pictures in high-quality JPEG mode. Battery life is also a problem, since you may not have time to charge batteries every night. Since we were traveling by car, I packed a 300W DC-to-AC inverter for emergency on-the-road battery charging - but I never had to use it. The Sony and Leica both come with high-capacity LiOn batteries, and both cameras were able to shoot over 200 pictures per charge. The Fuji 602 uses four standard AA batteries; I packed two sets of high-capacity NiMh batteries, but never needed the spare set during the trip. Storage capacity and battery life are important, but the picture quality is the ultimate judge of a camera. As we pulled onto I-75 in Sarasota, I had some pre-conceived notions about which camera would be best. 3500 miles later, and then I remembered why reviewers should never have pre-conceived notions. Read the reviews to find out why. (In case you're interested, we took the long way via Atlanta, St. Louis, Denver, Moab, and Las Vegas, then across the Southern California Desert to the coast and up the PCH to San Francisco. It's 500 miles longer than the more direct southerly route, and worth every extra mile. The VW performed flawlessly, except for two nerve-wracking vapor lock-induced stalls after we crossed the Continental Divide at 11,000 feet. Oh right, and the air conditioner - not the VW's strong suit - died altogether as we approached Las Vegas in 95° heat.) Nintendo Switch Lite next to phone (image credit: Russell Holly / Android Central) Feral Interactive is bringing the XCOM 2 Collection to Android soon, and that's pretty awesome. I hope it turns out to be one of the best Android games and is just as fun as I remembered it to be. But, unfortunately, it also highlights a couple of potential pain points for developers who want to release great console-quality games, like XCOM2 for Android. It's hard to make money, and many Android devices just aren't capable. I have no idea if Feral's decision to bring the collection to Android will be profitable (though I have seen plenty of moaning over the $25 price). Still, I know the way the company is weeding out the devices that can't run the game is the right thing to do and the right way to do it. Source: Feral Interactive (image credit: Source: Feral Interactive) These are the Android devices Feral will officially support, but that's not the whole picture. This is a list of devices the developers have actually tested the XCOM2 Collection on, and they are satisfied with the results. Other devices will be able to download the game, and it might play just fine. But devices that do not meet a bare minimum when it comes to hardware just won't be able to download the game at all. If your device is not listed but you are still able to purchase XCOM 2 Collection when it is released, your device is capable of running the game but is not officially supported. Devices that are not capable of running XCOM 2 Collection will be blocked from purchasing it. If your device is not listed but you are still able to purchase XCOM 2 Collection when it is released, your device is capable of running the game but is not officially supported. Devices that are not capable of running XCOM 2 Collection will be blocked from purchasing it. — Feral Interactive (@feralgames) June 24, 2021 June 24, 2021 See more Plenty of phones not listed will probably work just fine, and plenty of others won't. A phone like the RedMagic 6 Pro isn't going to have any issues if the OnePlus 6T or Galaxy S9 (or even the Galaxy S21) is able to handle it. A phone like the Galaxy M51 and its Snapdragon 730 is not going to be able to run it. The real question is in the higher end of mid-range devices that companies like Samsung, Motorola, and Google like to build. We won't know until it launches if phones like the Galaxy A71 or Google Pixel 5 can play XCOM2. That's kind of a bummer, but I like the way Feral is doing all of this, and I especially like that the company didn't try to change the game so slower devices can play it. Playing XCOM2 would suck if it was dumbed down and gutted so more phones could play it, and I wouldn't want to spend $25 on it. Evan Kubers, president of Rumble Gaming, had this to say when Android Central asked him about the risk versus reward strategy of Feral's decisions: In my opinion, this is not a risk but rather illustrates the natural progression of tech and business. Pragmatically, tech companies have always made software updates and product developments that were/are incompatible with previous generations. This isn't really any different than how a PS2 game can't be played on a PS1. Mobile gaming is the fastest-growing segment in the gaming space. I believe casual gamers and enthusiasts will always look to better performance as an incentive to upgrade their devices. I couldn't agree more. It's fine to expect the company that made your phone to keep it updated and secure throughout the entirety of its useful lifespan (by the way, that's longer than 3 years, Google) but if newer features can't be added it's understandable. On the other hand, wanting Feral to get XCOM2 running on older or slower phones is sort of like asking Google to add high screen-refresh support to the Pixel 4a. In both cases, the hardware just doesn't support it. XCOM2 developed for lower-spec devices probably wouldn't be worth $25. This isn't a new phenomenon, either. Remember those NVIDIA Tegra-only games back in the day? The NVIDIA version of Riptide GP was pretty cool and a helluva lot better than the non-NVIDIA version. It was also really unpopular because there were more people without an NVIDIA Tegra device than with one. Moves like Feral limiting the release of XCOM2 to only "premium" devices may prove just as unpopular, but it is necessary. All hope is not lost, though, because Cloud gaming really is a thing. If you have a phone that can't play XCOM2, there's a good chance it can install something like Stadia or Microsoft Game Pass, and you'll still have a choice of great games to play.
